

Plans for new B&B draw opposition

BY MARY G. SEILEY

A controversial bed and breakfast proposal prompted a parliamentary nightmare Wednesday, when Bay St. Louis city officials couldn't decide what to do with it.

The plan ended up in a "tabled" status, after Planning and Zoning Commission members voted against disapproving it, and against approving it.

"You're not following parliamentary procedure. The motion failed ... you're out now. The meeting is over now," advised City Council member Charles Scianna, who had sat through almost three hours of debate, as a spectator to the deliberations.

"You're dead in the water," advised another spectator, Burton Kemp, who had strenuously opposed the bed and breakfast proposed for 1360 North Beach Boulevard.

Commission Chairman Les Fillingame, however, urged the commission to table the request for 30 days, giving commissioners time to rethink the ramifications of putting a bed and breakfast facility amid an R-1 (single family residential) zone. After a month to study that general issue, he said, the commission should be able to make a recommendation for or against the specific proposal, and send it to City Council for final action.

What sparked the series of votes was a plan offered by Mr. and Mrs. W.E. Woodruff to use two or three of the five bedrooms at 1360 North Beach as a bed and breakfast establishment. They said they plan to buy the property known as Cedar Haven from Philip LaGrange and live there, regardless of whether the bed and breakfast operation is approved.

Opponents to the plan had barraged commissioners with letters of protest to the establishment, and cranked out fliers to drum up a crowd for the evening. It worked. Several dozen opponents crammed into City Hall annex for the action.

The Woodruffs' business would be the city's fourth bed and breakfast, joining the ranks of similar establishments at the corner of Demonstuzin at Beach Boulevard, Union Street and Blue Meadow Road.

Commissioner Kevin Fitzpatrick expressed concern about "proliferation" of such businesses in the city, without the controls that a well-thought-out ordinance could provide. He also said the Woodruffs' reasons for wanting the business seemed "whimsical" and lacked the degree of "professionalism" he would like to see.

"I worry we'll see the proliferation of bed and breakfasts all over town. If there isn't some quality control ... of these establishments, I'm afraid the proliferation and the inability of the city to police them may adversely affect the city," Fitzpatrick said.

The Woodruffs, who faced a mostly-hostile crowd during the long debate, took issue with Fitzpatrick's remarks. Mrs. Woodruff said how the establishment is run amounts to all the professionalism that's needed.

Constantly challenged by members of the audience, Mrs. Woodruff said she wants to operate the business "because I'm a people-person." She said she shuns soap operas and spending days in shopping malls, and refuses to while away time "gossiping" on the telephone.

Instead, she said, "I want to do something that's meaningful with my life ... I feel sorry for people who don't have anything else to do besides gossip on the telephone."

Opponents to the proposal were unsuayed by all arguments in favor of the plan, and by a long roster of stipulations commissioner David Reynolds proposed to govern the operation.

Sanctity of the city's R-1 zoning classification was at the heart of the opponents' arguments. While the request at issue wouldn't have rezoned the land, it would have placed a "special exception" to the zoning on it.

Opponents said that's tantamount to a foot in the door, possibly leading to later modifications or outright rezoning for commercialization of the residential area. Peggy Dutton said the special exception provisions shouldn't be used to "do an end run around zoning."

The Woodruffs said their business would accept guests only through reservations made long in advance, and only those that have been sufficiently screened to ensure they are responsible, respectable guests. Still, one opponent complained the residence would draw "unknown people in there," possibly compromising the safety of the neighborhood.

One vocal supporter, Barry Pinckus, characterized the Woodruffs as upstanding citizens with a fine proposal which would not generate additional traffic, pollute the environment or harm the vista of the neighborhood. "These people are not ogres ... Maybe you should adjourn and have a cup of coffee with them," he said to opponents, chastising the audience for being "so quick to condemn" proposals.

LaGrange, who owns the property, said many in the audience had purchased antiques at Cedar Haven -- an activity he said had drawn "no complaints" from the neighborhood. It quickly did.

Public input sought on development issues

BY MARY G. SEILEY

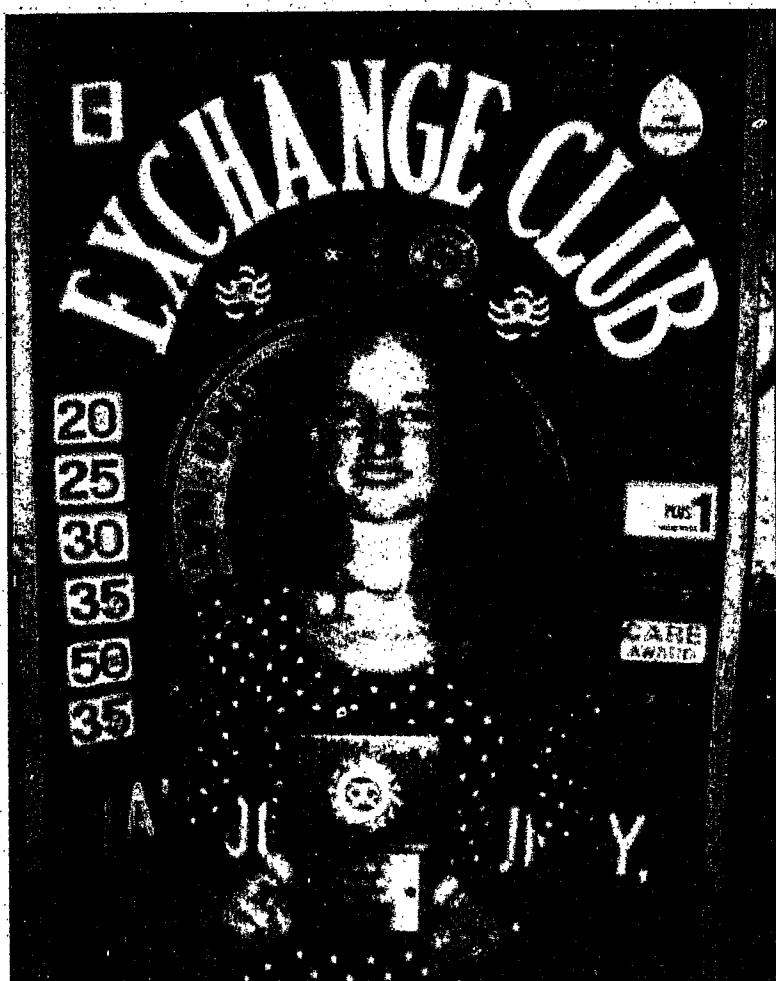

Bay St. Louis city officials plan to launch a series of public meetings as a new comprehensive development plan takes shape.

The plan, being written by Continental Consultants of Jackson, is expected to guide city development issues for the next 20 to 25 years. Continental officials met briefly with members of the Planning and Zoning Commission, and City Council, Wednesday night.

The officials agreed to schedule public meetings on a weekly basis beginning June 23, to gather input from local residents on what the plan should include.

The series of meetings is expected to culminate in an official public hearing before the plans are up for adoption this fall.

During Wednesday's meeting, the only decisions that were made concerned how different areas of the city would be designated as planning districts.

Flag Day '95 to be gigantic

BY ELLIS CUEVAS

Efforts are already underway for the biggest Flag Day ever for 1995 in Bay St. Louis, Gene Schloegel said Saturday.

"The interest shown from the governor's office, the cities, organizations, military units, businesses, and general public, clearly demonstrates the interest that all have in a revision of America's June 14 Flag Day," Schloegel added.

Bay St. Louis Mayor Eddie Favre, Schloegel, Bay St. Louis American Legion, Bay-Waveland Elks and several concerned citizens, are already making plans for gigantic state-wide celebration of Flag Day at the Bay Flag Memorial for 1995.

"Contacts are being made with military, veterans and civic organizations and schools to participate with their color guards and banners in 1995."

"We are going to have a walking track full of U.S. flags and organizational banners."

"1995, members of the Bay Flag Memorial will be recognized by additional inscriptions on the monument," he stated.

The program for 1995 is under development. "Prior to next year's celebration, a call is now being made for the donations of two matching marble benches to the monument. The benches will be inscribed with the donors' names," Schloegel said.

In 1916, the president made Flag Day official with a proclamation.

Biloxi Elks Lodge 606 organized a parade for the Mississippi coast in honor of this proclamation.

In 1994, Bay St. Louis observed Flag Day with the dedication and parade.

"While Flag Day has been official for many years, few honor it on June 14. The 1994 dedication and Mayor Eddie Favre's proclamation will bring about a greater observance of this special day," he said.

Starting with my military service, and my experience as a medic in the Korean Conflict, in addition to my years of involvement with veterans and civic organizations, the flag has been the centerpiece of each and every experience. Most simply, it is expressed to me with the Legion's slogan, "God and Country," Schloegel said.

Any individual, civic group, or business interested in being a member or contributor to the Bay Flag Memorial, contact Schloegel at 467-6772.

The company was awarded the NRL contract to re-engineer two remotely operated vehicles called ROVs that collect data for NRL at Stennis Space Center.

Safety belt law effective July 1

Although preventing death and serious injuries in motor vehicle crashes has been the overwhelming reason for using safety belts and child protective devices, July 1 will usher in two more reasons, according to the Department of Public Safety's Division of Public Safety Planning.

Beginning on this date, drivers and front-seat passengers not using safety belts and drivers of vehicles transporting children under the age of 4, who are not secured in child protection devices, will be subject to a $25 fine. Previously there was no penalty for not using safety belts, and the requirement for children to use protection devices applied only to children under age 2.

"The goal of these legislative measures is to encourage motorists to take the steps that could save their lives or prevent serious injuries in motor vehicle crashes," said Donald O'Cain, the division's executive director. "We want the penalties to be a deterrent rather than punishment."

Card of Thanks

On June 7th, we experienced an almost tragic incident when a fire started in the shed that was located only a few feet away from our two houses. With team effort from our family, friends, Emergency 911, and firefighters, the blaze, which destroyed our shed, was brought under control in a matter of minutes, saving both homes.

We would like to offer a special thanks to Chris Thompson, Mark Rush, Sr. and Jr., Richard Boutwell Sr. and Jr., Linda Bernard and Rick Bernard who all contributed in discovering the fire, notifying the officials and fighting the fire until the firefighters arrived.

We wish to express our greatest appreciation to Chief Danny Crabtree, Assistant Chief Andrew Arceneaux III, Captain A.J. Arceneaux, Jr.; Firefighters Jeff Reynolds and Doug Spiers; and First Responders Shanna Reynolds and Joseph Stiglet, all of the Bayside Volunteer Fire Department. We want to commend all of these people for their professionalism in performing this dangerous task.

Happy Father's Day
 Grandpa, I really miss you. Life here is not the same. I know it was not your decision and you are not to blame.

Grandma has her good days. But the bad days are still a part. I know she is lonesome. She still has a broken heart.

I try hard to please her, although sometimes it's tough. I'll always be there for her, all I promised you with love.

Grandpa we shared a "special" love throughout my growing years. You and Grandma were both so good to me. You loved me. Oh so dear.

Grandpa if I could take your place in the heavens up above, I would say Good-bye to all here on earth. Giving Grandma back the man she loves.

Love, Bobbie

Roland Tailor
Happy Father's Day
 As we look back on our life as we grew, you played a "special" part, you taught us all we knew. At times, you would scold us and we didn't understand. But you always would assure us with your love. We know now it was part of life's plan.

Daddy we will always know we were taught by the "best". You're a Dad that will always stand out amongst the "rest". So on this Father's Day and each day of the year through.

Know the honor and respect these two daughters have for you. Love, Jeannette and Jackie

Roland Tailor
Happy Father's Day
 Roland, this day makes me so very sad. First we lost our daughter Judy, then you, my husband, my children's Dad.

I know you and Judy are together in one place. If only I could see you and her's smiling face.

Roland, our bond of love will never be broken. We will be together again one day, for Our Lord has already spoken.

So I want you to know on this Father's Day

You are loved
 You are missed
 You're "special" in every way.
 Love, Louise

Commissioner Reynolds, who ran much of the meeting, at times lectured the audience about the ins and outs of zoning laws generally. He said the proposed bed and breakfast really amounts to a "home occupation" which would be adequately controlled by stipulations.

The Woodricks asked that action be taken one way or the other Wednesday, rather than having their request set aside.

ishment, I don't know of any law enforcement officer who gains pleasure from writing traffic law violation citations, but many of them have seen the tragic consequences of not using motor vehicle occupant protection devices."

Billy Terrell, director of the division's Office of Highway Safety, noted that "human nature is such that we sometimes need laws to protect us from becoming our own worst enemies...laws that deal with matters such as dangerous speeding, driving under the influence of alcohol or other drugs, causing vehicle crashes by not obeying traffic signals and, of course, failing to use the protection devices."

O'Cain said that "we hope the new laws will increase the use of safety belts and child protection devices with the result that hundreds of lives will be saved and many serious injuries prevented on Mississippi roadways."

"CUEVAS" QUOTES

By Ellis C. Cuevas

It has been a very long time since a news item on TV caught my attention as the O.J. Simpson incident did Friday night.

There is not a Hollywood writer, or team of writers who could have dreamed up such a suspense filled drama as the chase and arrest of Simpson.

Even Friday I had people asking me if I felt O.J. was guilty of the charges.

In America everyone is innocent until proven guilty. Yet, there some instances when many of us will come up with a guilty verdict before a trial. This I now feel is how most feel in the O.J. case.

Many will agree that most of us will have a feeling of sadness for Simpson's young children, the stigma they will face the rest of their lives. His ex-wife's family and the family of the friend killed too have to be thought about.

The 'whole story' is something we may never really know, as there seems to be so much speculation since this story began to unfold last week.

The media has a 'big story' to write and talk about and I am sure the O.J. story will be at the forefront for many months to come.

Today, Father's Day is celebrated across America. I would at this time like to take this opportunity to wish a very happy Father's Day to all fathers.

Usually there isn't as much 'to do' over Father's Day as other special days of the year.

A few of us were talking the other night about Father's Day and how sometimes it seems to be forgotten.

Those who are lucky enough to still have their father need to tell him how they feel about him today.

Hancock County Tourism & Gaming Association members are reminded of this month's meeting Monday, 6 p.m. at the Waveland Resort Inn.

This is a change in the day of week and also an evening meeting, so members need to mark their calendars.

Chevis C. Swetman, president of The Peoples Bank, will be the featured speaker.

Swetman's address will deal with the economic impact gaming has had on the community.

The meeting will be followed by a social sponsored by The Peoples Bank.

Members and their guests are invited to attend the meeting.

I received a telephone call Friday morning from a lady at a Bay St. Louis business reporting she had trouble getting out of her office the previous evening.

It seems a large snake took up residence at the exit door and she had to call the animal warden to remove the snake.

She said the snake looked like a water moccasin and as many of you know some can be dangerous.

The recent rains may be the cause of snakes moving about, so I urge all citizens to pay extreme attention and be on the lookout for snakes.

Those who live by open drainage ditches, and most citizens do in the area, really need to be alert.

Another problem from the rains is the fact that grass seems to grow overnight.

I had one resident tell me Friday morning she usually cuts her grass once a week and now it needs to be cut about twice a week.

One of the problems is, because of the amount of rain, it makes mowing a bit difficult, especially for those with poor drainage.

I guess we always have some complaints about the weather, yet there really isn't anything we can do about it.

Planning for natural disasters

The onset of hurricane season is a serious reminder of just how vulnerable Mississippi is to natural disasters. We have come to terms with hurricanes, tornadoes and flooding, and just this year met another menace with the ice storms that ravaged the northern part of the state. If seismologists are correct in their calculations, we also are at risk for an earthquake.

The challenge that we face in Mississippi, along with other disaster-prone states, is finding new means to reduce the loss of life, property, and the economic consequences of a catastrophic disaster.

One innovative approach to meeting this challenge may lie in the Natural Disaster Protection Act, legislation I am cosponsoring in the Senate. It was the subject of a recent hearing before the Senate Commerce Committee on which I sit.

The bill initiates mitigation programs designed to reduce disaster losses through stronger building code enforcement and enhanced emergency planning. The new money provided for these purposes would be funded entirely through private sector revenues.

The legislation would broaden the coverage of existing homeowners' insurance policies against disaster and assure the continued availability of homeowners' coverage both before and after a major event.

The Natural Disaster Protection Act establishes three interrelated programs: 1) a hazard mitigation program resulting in the construction of safer buildings and an improved state and local emergency management capability; 2) a primary insurance program providing affordable, comprehensive disaster protection for homes; and 3) a national reinsurance program financed by the insurance industry.

These programs would be self-funded, would not require any taxpayer subsidies, and would reduce the nation's reliance on federally-funded disaster assistance.

The hazard mitigation program proposes incentives to state and local governments to enhance their disaster planning and mitigation efforts in coordination with the Federal Emergency Management Agency (FEMA). To qualify for the incentives, states would be required to adopt one of several model building and safety codes designed to make new construction less vulnerable to natural perils.

States would have to submit a comprehensive disaster plan to FEMA that includes detailed steps for identifying at-risk structures and methods to improve building code enforcement, emergency response and overall disaster preparedness. They also would have to comply with the building codes and implement new mitigation plans within five years.

The Act also would create incentives for insurance companies to provide a more comprehensive homeowners' policy, including standard coverage for natural perils. Rates for this coverage would be risk-based so that homeowners in prone areas would not be subsidized by residents from low-risk areas.

Finally, our bill would address the homeowners' insurance availability problems which have occurred in the wake of recent disasters. It would reduce the potential for insurance company insolvencies from exceptionally large disasters through the creation of a new federal disaster reinsurance fund financed by the insurance industry.

The reinsurance funds would provide an insurance source which insurers could purchase to better manage the risk from highly infrequent, but extremely costly disasters.

Prior to 1992, no individual natural disaster ever resulted in costs of over $1 billion. In 1992, however, natural disasters resulted in $23 billion of property losses. The escalating impacts and costs of the most recent natural disasters are fresh in our minds. The conditions are right for us to act in a studied way to address disasters comprehensively.

THE PEOPLE'S BUSINESS

A Weekly Editorial From Mississippi Economic Council

Health care burden must be shared

Mississippians enjoy, as do other Americans, the benefits of a health care system that provides the finest physicians and nurses, the best hospitals, the most advanced medical technology, and the most promising medical research in the world today.

But national and local debate has brought to light the fact that not all people have adequate access to health care. The changes this debate will most likely bring about could have one of the most dramatic impacts on Mississippi and American business in the nation's history.

And, once again, many politicians are finding the business community a popular place to point the finger. Suddenly, it is the fault of business that a portion of Americans remain uninsured for health care. And yet, the American business community is the largest provider of health insurance in the nation.

If responsibility for health care is shifted inequitably from individuals to business, the effect could be devastating.

Small business, not big business, would feel the greatest brunt of Washington's blow. And, who will be the greatest ones to suffer? The men and women employed by these businesses.

The Mississippi Economic Council believes employers should be encouraged, through tax incentives and other means, to provide health care insurance for employees.

However, MEC opposes mandatory requirements for employer-paid health care benefits. Such a burden could be devastating to American small business and, therefore, Mississippians.

Widowhood analysis can prevent future problems

By Janet K. Lukens
Consumer Management Specialist

Money has traditionally been the male province. A gentleman once told me that his wife did not need to learn about financial management. He took care of those things. I believe he preferred to keep her in the dark. I wonder if he had considered what would happen to her if he died?

Statistics indicate that women pay the bills in 75 percent of American households. However, the man of the house generally makes the major financial decisions. This means many widows are left unprepared but forced into major responsibilities in one of the most traumatic times in their lives.

There are specific steps a woman can take to prevent financial complications after the death of a spouse. It is always preferable that steps be taken before there is a problem. But even when preparations have not been made in advance, there are ways to minimize problems after the death of a spouse.

Every married woman should prepare a widowhood analysis. This short financial statement gives a picture of how the finances would look if your spouse should die. It projects annual income and expenses. The statement should include the —Survivor's benefits from any pensions and social security.

—Personal earnings of the surviving spouse.

—Include income which could be derived from assets including life insurance proceeds, current savings and investments. Project investment earnings using conservative estimates of what you expect over a period of time.

—Add total annual expenses anticipated. Subtract expenses from income to determine a balance or deficit. Then take decisions on whether additional income is needed.

As you analyze your financial status, be certain you have set aside an adequate reserve fund, have access to your spouse's important papers and records, and are aware of the family debt situation.

Widows often ask the question, if my husband should die, would I be responsible for his debts? In most instances, you would not be responsible for any debts you did not consent to or derive any benefit from. However, before you begin paying his bills, consult an attorney for specific guidance in your situation.

In the initial stages, the bereaved often feel compelled to take action — any action — to demonstrate control over their lives. This is not the time for irrevocable action. Some grief counselors recommend postponing a move, a major purchase or major investment for a period of six to eighteen months after the death of a spouse.

Rather than making hasty decisions, take this time to locate papers and organize the finances, start a listing of estate income and expenses and open an account to receive such income, keep a detailed diary of all meetings with legal and financial advisors, and make a "to do" list outlining specific tasks and appointments which need to be made.

Information helps when making insurance decisions

By Judy L. Goddard
Area Consumer Management Specialist

Ask almost anyone and they'll tell you that insurance is important to their financial well-being. But there's a question, too: do I have the type of coverage I need and in the amount needed?

Making insurance decisions would be easier if we knew what would take place in the future. Since we don't, we are left to base decisions on the best information available.

Answering two questions provides much needed information about our insurance needs: what financial risks do I have and how can I best manage these risks?

Once these questions are answered, we can plan an insurance program that helps secure our financial well-being.

Perhaps the place to begin is by defining "risk." In insurance, a risk is an event which could create a financial hardship should it take place. Risk falls into two groups: income risks and expenditure risks.

Income risks involve those events which could interrupt or stop income. Among these would be a loss of a job, the death of a wage earner, or the illness or injury to a wage earner. An expenditure risk would be an event which would require a payment.

These include the cost of replacing or repairing property that is lost, damaged or destroyed; the expense of medical treatment; or liability if found to be responsible for harm to another.

With that brief explanation, think about the risks you and your household have. Make a written list of those events which would pose financial hardship for you.

Remember that while some risks may be common among households, the risk will affect each differently. It would be helpful for you if the list included some description of how you would be affected.

What you've generated is a "worry list," if you will. Its purpose is to increase your awareness of things which could have an adverse financial impact, not to be a source of distress.

For each risk you have identified, ask yourself, "what if this happened. How would we handle it?" In addition to insurance, your plan could include eliminating or reducing the possibility of the risk occurring, creating a savings fund to help with the financial consequences, perhaps taking no action, or selling assets.

With the information you've pulled together, you are now ready to focus on those areas in which insurance would be most helpful. A good guideline to use when planning is to insure for the large losses.

That is, buy insurance for those risks which would use up savings and other assets or obligate future income.

Smaller losses — insurance deductibles, some routine medical expenses, repairing minor damage, etc. — can be managed with current income or cash reserve.

Insurance is a relatively large expenditure for most households and it's important to the household's financial well-being.

As you increase your understanding about the financial risks you have as well as your options for those risks, the insurance plan you put in place will have a greater chance of meeting your needs.

Job Corps age limits extended

Jack Wells

Young adults up to their 25th birthday are now eligible for Job Corps, a highly successful federal job training program, according to Jack Wells and Vivian Taylor, Job Corps recruiters in Hancock County. Previously the cut-off was a person's 22nd birthday.

"Job Corps is one of the best-kept secrets in government training programs for the disadvantaged," Wells says. Young people from age 16 through 24 in Job Corps attend a residential center where they can learn job skills and good work habits, earn their GED, even advance to college training if they wish, Wells says. Skills they can learn vary from auto mechanics to health professions to food service and many more.

REFLECTIONS ON LIFE

By Father Jerome LeDoux, SVD

Health care is the biggest buzz term of this time in our history. That, despite the horrors and urgency of Bosnia, the Middle East, North Korea, South Africa and numerous hotspots smoking ominously around the globe.

Call it a political football if you will. It is also a reality so stark and so compelling that none of us can ignore it, and very many of us are forced to pursue it.

My friend Carolyn definitely fits the latter category since 1988, when she was diagnosed with Crohn's disease. The doctor warned her that she urgently needed an operation to take care of a hernia in her stomach area.

In 1991, she was told sternly that she would die unless she had an operation. The doctor also told her how easily she could die if she engaged in any strenuous physical activity or if she was submitted to negative stress.

With these admonitions and the results of her many tests in hand, Carolyn went to the Welfare office to get a medical card which would enable her to pay for the operation. When her request was rejected out of hand, she told me:

"Their (the Welfare) doctors don't go by records from the doctors who have examined you. They just look at you and determine whether you can work. I looked strong to them."

"What about the findings of two of your doctors?" I asked. "They warned you that any strenuous physical activity or any negative stress could kill you in short order."

"They don't take that into consideration," she answered. "Your medical reports are useless to them. All their doctors did was look me over and decide that I could work."

"I should have qualified for Welfare because I was physically incapable of work. I should have also qualified for Social

Health vs. federal law

Security since I had worked hard for many years. It is unbelievable to me that I have been rejected by both.

"After being turned down repeatedly, I took the matter to an administrative judge. I would have won, except that my lawyer, who understands and speaks English poorly, forgot to bring the papers of my medical tests and reports to court."

"Ever since then, everyone has led me around in circles, even though an administrative judge later gave me an amended decision. A Social Security consultant argued at the hearing that she had gone to my job site and found no stress."

"I asked her how she knows there was no stress on the job, and had she done that kind of work before. She had no answer, for she had not done any similar work before."

"Finally, moved by the force of my doctors' warning that I could die if exposed to strain or stress, the administrative judge did give me an amended decision. Certainly, Lowe no thanks to the Social Security employees.

"The bottom line is, Social Security has not granted me a medical card; so I still cannot pay for an operation which I need in order that I will not die in the near future."

"What bothers me further is how hard it is for someone who has worked to get on welfare, while it is so easy for those who have not worked. That includes repeat unwed mothers and numerous addicts or various kinds."

Beyond doubt, we have very defective health care laws on the books. Worse, the administrators favor the wrong people.

The Mississippi Trucking Association has authorized a $10,000 reward for information leading to the arrest and conviction of the person or persons responsible for the death of truck driver, Herbert L. Newsome of Monroe, Louisiana.

Newsome was shot as he drove his 18-wheel tractor-trailer west on I-20 at U.S. 80 east of Brandon around 8:30 p.m. on Tuesday, June 9, 1994.

Jackie Rogers, President of the Mississippi Trucking Association, announced the unanimous action by the Mississippi Trucking Association Board of Directors. "This appears to be a senseless act perpetrated by a cold blooded killer randomly shooting at truckers," according to Rogers.

Anyone having information about this incident are asked to call the Mississippi Highway Patrol at 601-987-1212 and ask for the Criminal Investigation Bureau, or contact the Rankin County Sheriff's at 601-825-2217.

NASA and Raggedy Ann highlight library's program

Life aboard the Space Shuttle and a safety program by Raggedy Ann and Andy will highlight this week's activities of the Hancock County Library System's 1994 Summer Reading Program.

Visitors' Center personnel from NASA's John C. Stennis Space Center will conduct two sessions-Tuesday, June 21, at 1:30 p.m. at the Kiln Library; and Wednesday, June 22, at 10:30 a.m. at the Coast Electric Power Association Auditorium.

Coast Electric's Raggedy Ann will visit the Waveland Library on Friday, June 24, at 10:30 a.m. to give the children some summer safety tips, such as water safety, electrical safety and playground safety.

The NASA programs will consist of a hands-on demonstration about what life is like aboard the Space Shuttle; a NASA film; and a question and answer session about NASA and space travel. Personnel will also read a story to the children. The Story, "Allister," is about a little boy who is trying to return his books to the library before they are overdue and he has to pay a fine. In the process, he is picked up accidentally by a spaceship and taken to outer space.

Summer reading program participants must visit the branch of their choice at least four (4) times, and check out at least six (6) books before June 29. A reading record will be provided each child, and they need only get each visit stamped on their reading record for validation purposes.

A certificate and goodie bag will be presented each participant who completes four (4) visits to the library and reads at least six (6) books. Merit stars will be presented for every five

(5) books read beyond the basic goal of six (6) books. Awards will be presented the week of July 5.

In order to register, children must come to the branch of their choice, complete their reading record, set their goal and confirm that their parents have a current library card. A library card is required to check out any books, and cardholders must be 18-years-old and have the necessary identification.

Further information is available by calling Janice Parrott at the City-County Library, 467-5282; Sandra Ladner, Kiln Library, 255-1724; or Evelyn Necaise, Waveland Library, 467-9240.

BREWER'S WORLD

By Jimmie Brewer

All right all you over-taxed, slightly balding, boxer shorts wearing, couch potato Dads, this one is for you!

I hope you dudes get everything you want today. For my Dad, the perfect present is a can of sardines, a six-pack of cheap beer, and a day on the sofa watching old war movies. I can see him now, decked out in his 10-year-old boxer shorts and decaying t-shirt stretched out on the couch clinging to the remote control. And why not? Lord knows he deserves it.

He's the one who for 40 years now has brought order to a sometimes chaotic household. He's the one who served his country and fought in the Korean war. He's the one who provided for his family without fail day after day, year after year, and decade after decade. He's the one who taught all his boys to play ball and to never accept second place.

He's the one who taught us never to back down even when our opponents were bigger, faster, and more naturally talented. He's the one that stayed up nights until all of his kids had made it safely home.

He's the one who saw to it that all his kids graduated school with above average grades. He's the one who encouraged his sons to date nice girls, and who discouraged his daughters from dating anyone at all. He's the one who somehow managed to pay all his bills on time and still see to it that enough money was tucked away for our annual vacations. He's the one who never once struck any of his children, even though at times we deserved it.

He's the one that wore the same pair of shoes for years and years so that his kids could have new clothes for school. He's the one that arrived at the breakfast table each morning smelling of fresh after-shave lotion.

Dad, I could go on and on about all you've accomplished and sacrificed for your family, but I know you would just give all the credit to someone else. Kick back and chill out Dad, your kids are all happy, healthy and successful, thanks to you.

On another note: Juice, tell me you didn't do it! Tell me the greatest running back of all times didn't totally flip-out and kill those people. Tell me I'm dreaming! A super mega star like yourself who has been idolized for decades couldn't possibly be capable of such a horrendous crime. I'm not convicting you yet, Juice, but I'd say you got a whole heap of explaining to do to us loyal fans. We're waiting!

There is a good lesson here, however, for you folks out there who idolize superstars and movie stars. They aren't the real heroes of this world. The real hero is that dude who works two jobs to support his family or the folks who stand at the finish line to hug Special Olympics athletes as they cross. The people who volunteer their time to help the needy. The Vietnam veteran who died for our country in a war they did not understand. The people who dress up as the Easter Bunny or Santa Claus to bring smiles to the sick children of the world. The people who regularly commit random acts of kindness. These are the folks who deserve to be put up on a pedestal. These people are my heroes.

Praise for do-gooders this week goes out to all you Dads. Have a great day, and don't forget to turn off the T.V. when you go to bed. Peace.

Uninvolved miss opportunities

By Dr. Ann Jarratt
4-H Youth Development Specialist
Cooperative Extension Service

"I hear kids at school griping about how strict and unreasonable their parents are; how they're on their case about something all the time. I act like I understand completely, but I don't."

"My parents don't know or care where I am or what I do so long as I'm not in their hair. Most of the time that's pretty nice, but sometimes I wish they would show a little interest—maybe ask what kind of record my team has this year or whether I'm thinking about college."

"Is there anything I can do to get their attention?"

When I get letters like yours, the first thing I want to do is go find the parents and tell them how they're missing the boat as parents. I want to tell them there's a young person who needs them to be there to show interest, caring and support. I would remind them that young people who have supportive parents usually do better in school and in other activities.

I would have to remind them that you didn't ask to be born into their family; they chose to give you life. When they gave you life, they became obligated for your care and nurturance until you reached majority.

What can you do? First of all, get it straight in your mind who has the problem here. They do! They're missing out on your life.

What else can you do? Tell them about what's happening in your life. Continue inviting them to your activities. Let them know it would mean a lot to you for them to be there. If you have other relatives or adult friends nearby, invite them too. If they all show up, GREAT! The more the merrier. Don't give up on your parents. One day you may write and ask how to get them to slack off.

"I've heard that a kid at my school has AIDS. A friend of mine is dating a person that person used to date. The word around school is that they used to sleep together. Should my friend be concerned about getting AIDS?"

You bet your friend should be concerned if they've been having sex! Anyone having unprotected sex has an even greater risk of becoming infected. AIDS is an "equal opportunity" virus.

Anyone exposed to it has an equal opportunity to be infected.

Talk with your friend about the dangers of casual sex. Even if some of the rumors aren't true, unprotected casual sex can be deadly. If your friend's dating partner has tested positive for HIV, and they are sexually active, you could talk with your friend about being tested.

The American Social Health Association offers free, confidential information on sexually transmitted diseases through its National STD (Sexually Transmitted Disease) Hotline and publications program. The hotline number is 1-800-227-8922.

If you have questions concerning your teenage years, contact Dr. Ann Jarratt, 4-H youth development specialist, Box 9641, Mississippi State, MS 39762.

TEEN TALK

Local residents attend election conference

South Mississippi-area residents interested in elections, especially the new National Voter Registration Act, recently participated in the 5th Annual Voter Awareness Conference in Jackson.

Among the participants from Bay St. Louis were Elizabeth Benvenuti and Peter J. Benvenuti.

The conference, sponsored by the Secretary of State's Office, was held on the Jackson State University campus and focused on elections administration and implementation of the National Voter Registration Act, often called the "Motor Voter" law because eligible citizens can register to vote at driver's license examination sites.

Secretary of State Dick Molpus was the featured speaker at the noon luncheon. He was introduced by Rep. Tomie Green of Jackson.

COOKING UP A STORM

By Katy McGuire Caire

Appetizers ready for weddings, parties

June weddings, along with all the pre-nuptial parties, share the interest these days with welcoming parties for summer house guests, as well as impromptu gatherings all along the coast. And, just about everyone is searching for party foods, from formal wedding reception to picnic supper.

At least, it seems that way to me, with invitations crowding the mailbox and telephone; and, also, judging from the requests for party recipes which have been coming my way!

I like to keep a variety of appetizers in the fridge and freezer, for unexpected company, or just to have on hand when I ask friends over. Cheese balls and sausage balls, and artichoke balls freeze well, for instance, and are ever so easy to make. And, there are many easy spreads and dips to round out the appetizer trays.

Artichokes are always welcomed by guests and family alike. Of course, I like fresh artichokes, and like to stuff artichokes; a stuffed artichoke or so, is an excellent offering. But, I usually keep a few cans of artichoke hearts in the pantry shelf, for quick hors d'oeuvres, such as:

HOT ARTICHOKE DIP
1 can (14 oz.) artichoke hearts, drained and mashed
1 cup (8 oz.) mayonnaise
1 cup shredded or grated Parmesan cheese

That's all there is to it. Mix it all well together, place in lightly buttered shallow baking dish or pie pan and bake at 350 degrees for half an hour. Let cool slightly before serving with crisp crackers or wheat wafers. This is even good when it's cold (if there's any left). It has an elusive taste, almost of crabmeat. And even quicker and good is:

ARTICHOKE DIP
1 can artichoke hearts, drained and mashed
1 cup mayonnaise
1 envelope Italian Salad Dressing (dry) mix
Blend well together, and use as a dip for assorted crackers or for fresh raw vegetables, or as a stuffing for mushrooms or cherry tomatoes.

It seems that today's society thinks that by giving and giving, we will better our children's lives. Not necessarily so. The gift makes the difference.

Our world needs fathers who had a Godly role model. This will ensure Godly sons who become Godly fathers and the gift goes on.

Spend your time with your family. Attend worship services with them every week.

With the mobile service, there is absolutely no inconvenience to the customer. You need not be late for work or have to arrange for a ride while waiting for your windshield to be repaired. Kersanac will come to your home or your office and make the repairs on the spot.

The prompt, quality service is available seven days a week. Services offered include the repair of any windshield damage, including dings or cracks up to 24 inches in size. Coast Windshield Repair can also help in the removal of scratches in windshields.

Kersanac said in most cases, your insurance company will pay for windshield repairs, so there is no out of pocket expense, and there is no charge if you are not completely satisfied with the repairs. All work comes with a written guarantee that the cracks will not spread or discolor.

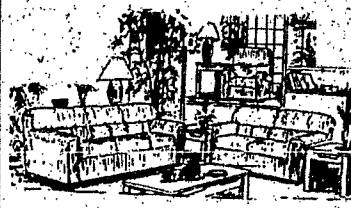

Don't stare at that crack or ding any longer. Call Joe Kersanac at 467-5136 or 1-800-748-8540 for a free estimate.
